Blame it on the Grammys: Jamie Foxx, Russell Brand and more toast music's big night

February 1, 2010 | 3:33 pm

In an award season stuffed with conservative cocktails and polite applause, the Grammys serve as a welcome wild child. After Sunday night's big show, recording royalty flocked to their respective bashes and did what they do best -- make beautiful music.

Jamie Foxx and Grey Goose hosted a soiree at L.A. Live's the Conga Room, just across the street from the ceremony at Staples Center. Foxx -- who won a Grammy along with T-Pain for R&B performance by a duo or group with vocals for the song "Blame It" -- welcomed the likes of Gerard Butler, Jody Watley, Jason Mraz and pop princess Kristine Elezaj. The actor-singer tapped rappers LMFAO for an intimate live performance, earning major points from his teenager Corinne, who danced with girlfriends while her dad played emcee.

With a bottle of Veuve Clicquot in hand, Foxx donned gold aviators and asked the packed house, "Who wants to do some shots?"
